THE BATTLE OF FREDERICKSBURG.—LIST OF NORTH CAROLINIANS KILLED AND WOUNDED CONTINUED.

We continue the list of killed and wounded among our troops in the battle of Fredericksburg. It is a mournful record but it shows how desperately our braves fought the gunboats who were attempting to pollute their soil:

HEADQUARTERS, 18th Reg't N. C. Troops,

[illegible] Progress may be had [illegible] to the morning at all it [illegible] FIVE CENTS.

[illegible] Hooker's daily [illegible] [illegible] of Gen. Hooker, dated [illegible] the "victories" claimed by Foster [illegible] official report of his march to Kinston bridge and [illegible] again, the New York Herald, a paper that is [illegible] ready to admit more for the Yankees than they [illegible], says of this exploit of Foster in North Carolina: "Amount to nothing practically;" and the Journal [illegible] that wanted glory to the same paper [illegible] to find "the crumb of it in every [illegible] reported to Kinston bridge."

[illegible] Kinston, and beaten at Pretty [illegible] for the passing [illegible] movement on Wilmington is [illegible] to the [illegible] can neither the confederate [illegible] army of people need hope that it is on the [illegible] of a grand [illegible] to wrench and [illegible] [illegible] it is certain [illegible] dangerous to get in [illegible] they [illegible] safely to Kinston, but will the way of [illegible] return? [illegible] think not. Our [illegible] agree in the [illegible] Richmond, Petersburg and Weldon, is of the most [illegible] character, and the people that can [illegible] which will soon telegraph, comparatively [illegible] have been fought near Murfreesboro', Tenn., will result in [illegible] favor and the dismemberment of the rebellion. [illegible] believe in the justice of an overruling Providence, and that the Lord of hosts is with us, and in this confidence we rest our belief that the enemy may be more [illegible] and disaster at all points till they are "overthrown [illegible] of the wind of their own mouth in a pestilential [illegible] will be alike just and honorable to us. The negro [illegible] of the wise may tell us of blood and carnage in the [illegible] of Mississippi, of the plains of Old Mexico and dying end of the chain of the storm, but we fear not for the result. Truth and justice, fatally attacked [illegible] sacred rights are the jewels for which our heroes [illegible] contend, and pitying their trust in Him that rules in Heaven above and the Earth beneath they cannot be confounded.

The husbands the West will be fought but the struggle will be sure, and a thicker gloom will settle over the North—their starving millions will cry peace—the sorrowing families of soldiers, slain and in the field will cry peace—the corrupt leaders at Washington will hide their fates before the indignation of the infuriated masses, and peace will come! It may and no doubt will work the downfall of Lincoln and the ruling faction by whom he has been controlled, but never before peace will come. A few more months of suffering, of blood and carnage, of subscriptions and drafts, and peace will smile again upon a people who have abundantly shown themselves worthy of peace with independence and a nationality.

Everything in the stores from the North is full of hope, for this press and the statesmen of that region have undoubtedly set themselves to work to stop the war, and they will do it. The radical faction may keep up a show of resistance for a few months, but the leaven is at work, and the great uprising of the wronged cannot be resisted. Peace they want and peace they mean to have, at whatever cost or sacrifice; but we can assure them that this peace must be upon terms alike honorable and just to our people.

From Newbern.

A private letter to the Editor from an intelligent officer stationed below Kinston, dated Dec. 26th, says: "You need not be surprised to hear of another general move upon, for certainly there is any number of Yankees in and around Newbern. I heard from there yesterday by a patriotic man, who says that two large steamers, filled with troops, left Newbern on the 19th and went down the river, and he heard they were going around and up the Blackwater, while a large land force consisting of infantry, artillery and cavalry, left Newbern in the direction of Kinston. Now all this may be so or it may not, but certainly our authorities ought to keep a good lookout."

If troops have left Newbern we think it more likely they have gone in the direction of Washington or Greenville, for we are assured that no movement had been made in the direction of Kinston up to Monday.

Foster's Loss.—As others writing from Fort Lookout, whose means of information are the conversations of the Yankees in every public place, place his loss of twelve hundred in killed, wounded and missing in the late raid upon Kinston and the railroad, and looks that sum much below what we "have to fight," We doubt not but they approach very near the truth as to their own loss, but know that they are mistaken as to ours. We hardly think Foster will repeat his excursion up the Neuse again in a hurry. He has gone to Washington to report to his master, and the Herald will be busy doing as a failure. Poor Foster, your star is on the wane that of Burnside.

A Warning.—A case of Small-Pox has occurred in this city. The only means of prevention is by vaccination. The Surgeon General of the State has prepared to vaccinate all persons, free of charge, and we call upon the citizens of Raleigh to avail themselves of this opportunity. We understand that Dr. Warren has made first class arrangements for vaccinating the whole community, ladies and servants all who may apply to him.

Near Fredericksburg, Va.,
Dec. 17, 1862.

Dear Yagers.—Exposed to the cold and rainy weather for six days and nights, you will please excuse me for not writing sooner. My health is very bad from exposure. I can assure you my pro cumsance [illegible] the horrors we have undergone, though I will give you an idea of things [illegible] during our six days [illegible]. Last Thursday morning at 8 o'clock we were aroused by the firing of shot guns. Without preparing anything to eat or repose on, we [illegible] on the left to oppose the crossing of the enemy. They attempted to cross, but we poured such heavy volleys into them, they were compelled to give back. [illegible] below Deep Run, (in front of Jackson) they attempted to cross again, but Jackson gave it to them so heavy, they fell back again. About 12 o'clock we were ordered to assist the right; but, after reaching the turnpike, we heard that Jackson did not want our assistance. We remained there until night. We [illegible] our horses, ate crackers and pork raw!—I witnessed many horrible sights such as I never dreamed mortal eyes would be of experiencing; but so.—Women, children [illegible] in their arms, and some swimming down the creeks, would ask us as they passed, to get their babies back for them, every man responding in the same order, "we will." Our loss was very small. The enemy's loss from what we could learn of citizens [illegible] have been heavy.—Our Regiment lost none. About 10 o'clock that night (Thursday) we marched down in the valley, in front of the town, formed a line of battle, and there remained until morning. At half past eight our batteries opened on the enemy from three different points,—Shelling was kept up on both sides all day. Our loss was more trifling. The enemy's loss terrible heavy. Our regiment had one to be killed and [illegible] wounded. Next comes the terrible day (Saturday).—Hour in the morning both parties opened with every battery that could be used. At seven, the Infantry commenced the deadly conflict. At eleven o'clock our regiment was called upon to clear the enemy that we were North Carolinians. We formed a line, ascended the hill, fired a few shots, every man shouting at the top of his voice. We charged on them but did not get very near, before they commenced running. We drove them by hundreds. We soon reached a peak fence, where we took our position. The enemy then made a heavy charge upon us, but we killed them so fast they gave back. They made another charge, and finding that our force was getting stronger and stronger, they again came back. About that time the 49th N. C. thinking we were the Yankees fired into us, but as it happened our regiment was next to the fence and Webb's Legion was between us and the foe.—They killed several by my side, but I escaped unhurt. I must go back to the commencement of our charge. While charging through the field, Capt. Webb's company [illegible] was on my left. He was shot dead and one more fell. I had a narrow escape. We were engaged 7½ hours. That night we marched upon the hill and gave the batteries fits the next day. I was ordered into, but did not get into one man wounded. Before I have not given you any particulars of the fight, for my health will not allow it, and besides you will hear it down here more graphic than mine. I will say with me of Sunday, Monday and Tuesday, but if I live and ever come back to Wayne, I will give you the history of the fight. I can assure you, no person ever got a worse threshing. They are lying in heaps and also scattered all over the battle field, four miles long. Our whole army had breastworks to stand behind. I have heard a great many Generals say they never saw an army whipped worse. To-day I found a puppy on the battle field and brought him off untouch. I have got him here at the camp, and I intend sending him to her as soon as I can, and I want her to take care of him for my sake; his name is Ft. Battle. I have not learned the loss of our regiment, but I can give it as to my little band, 25 in number. I had none killed, one wounded badly in thigh, (Gabriel Coley,) G. S. Johnson, Wm. Rawls and George Smith were slightly wounded in the arm, but did not leave the battle field. I forgot to tell you that the Yankees made breastworks of their dead men. After charging up a breastwork of 6 feet high with their dead men, there was a plenty more dead men to make another. Tell Battle, as this was Burnside's army, she may name the dog after him if she likes. I received the overcoat, boots and the other clothing you sent by Lt. Parker.

I remain your son.

Daring Attempt.—Between the Monday night scouts during supper entered the dwelling of Gen. Wilmington street, through a window, and proceeded to the room occupied by the proprietor, Rev. Father Quigley, and with a pair of hatchets broke open the door and proceeded to break the locks of several trunks and a small [illegible]. Upon an investigation yesterday, it could not be ascertained whether anything had been taken, the guests being absent, but a pair of pants belonging to the pastor was found on the lower floor, which had been dropped by the thieves. The villains did not enter the body of the Church and the altar ornaments were left undisturbed.

From the Virginia Valley.—The Dispatch says that Milroy has fallen back and left the Lower Valley of Virginia free. He feared to threaten it no [illegible]. Since the defeat at Fredericksburg the Yankees seem to have lost confidence in themselves everywhere.

Return of Mallett's Battalion.—Col. Mallett's Battalion, [illegible] five companies, arrived from below by the train last evening and marched up Fayetteville street, to their [illegible] camp, seemingly in good condition and [illegible] spirits. There is no finer material in the service than the [illegible] compose this battalion, as was abundantly proved at [illegible] seems to have in the fight below Kinston. [illegible] that those who unfortunately fell into the hands of the enemy in the battle of Kinston, and are now on parole, will soon be exchanged, so they may again take their places among their comrades.

A large [illegible] were made by last night, and the [illegible] to fall rapidly. The river, however, [illegible] still [illegible] [illegible] [illegible]
